Pacquiao-Hatton showdown to cement spot in ring history

WHEN BILL MEETS MANNY Former US President Bill Clinton drops in on boxing's No. 1 attraction at the Four Seasons Hotel at Mandalay Bay Resort and Casino in Las Vegas on Thursday. Clinton, who's no slouch himself when it comes to charisma, personally wished the Philippines' pride good luck.

LAS VEGAS, NEVADA—Filipino southpaw Manny Pacquiao matches his speed and deceptive moves against the superior size and power of British star Ricky Hatton on Saturday (Sunday morning in Manila) in a long-awaited boxing showdown.

Both 30-year-old fighters are trying to cement their spot in ring history in the junior welterweight matchup, with Pacquiao, 48-3 with two draws and 35 knockouts, a slight oddsmakers favorite over Hatton, 45-1 with 32 knockouts.

"I'm confident I will win," Pacquiao said. "I've worked hard for the past eight weeks, looked at a lot of his fights, and I'm ready to fight." The fight starts at 9:54 p.m. here (12:54 p.m. Sunday in Manila).

Pacquiao, who defeated David Diaz and Oscar de la Hoya in heavier weight classes last year, is well within the 140-pound limit, tipping the scales at 137 lbs. in shorts and training shoes two days before Saturday's fight.

In contrast, Hatton may still be struggling to make the welterweight limit a few hours before Friday's official weigh-in. He was seen running out in the sun, obviously still trying to shed excess poundage. (See story on Page A21.)

Pacquiao could match the all-time record by becoming a champion in his sixth different weight class by lifting Hatton's International Boxing Organization

SPEED A15

HITMAN Ricky Hatton is all business as he works out for the media on the same ring where he will stake his world welterweight title against Manny Pacquiao.

MUSCLE MAN Manny Pacquiao shows off his muscles during his final workout for his much-awaited ring date with Englishman Ricky Hatton billed as The Battle of East and West which will unfold on May 2 before a soldout MGM Grand Garden Arena at 9:54 p.m. Saturday, 12:54 p.m. Sunday in Manila.

People told not to panic as swine flu cases rise

GOVERNMENTS ACROSS ASIA and the Pacific warned people not to panic as the tally of confirmed human cases of swine flu rose and the Roman Catholic Church in New Zealand ordered priests not to place communion wafers in worshippers' mouths because of risks.

In Manila, the archdiocese yesterday issued a circular for an oratio imperata, or an obligatory prayer, to be said during Mass as a shield against the virus.

Following an order from Archbishop Gaudencio Cardinal Rosales, the archdiocese's minister for liturgical affairs, Fr. Genaro Diwa, urged the saying of the prayer on bended knee after Holy Communion starting on Sunday.

ACTIVIST WORKERS AGAIN marked Labor Day yesterday with street protests, but many more Filipinos in search of employment crowded the job fairs set up nationwide by the Department of Labor and Employment.

Joel Elegario, 20, said he was not protesting in the streets because he needed to find work.

"I've been waiting for six hours and I haven't had lunch. I left my place in the line and I might have lost my slot," said the criminology graduate.

In Metro Manila, the SMX Convention Center at the SM Mall of Asia in Pasay City, the main venue of "Trabaho '09," hosted more than 20,000 walk-in and online applicants.

Assistant Labor Secretary Reydeluz Conferido said 2,501 applicants were hired on the spot for local jobs, mostly in business processing offices especially call centers, and in retail and sales, including tourism.

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO leaves early today for a visit to the Arab countries of Egypt and Syria on a mission to ensure peace in the South and attract more investors into the country.

Ms Arroyo, who heads a lean delegation composed mostly of Cabinet members, is scheduled to leave at 2:30 a.m. on a chartered Philippine Airlines flight to Cairo, said Press Secretary Cerge Remonde.

The President will be making a two-day official working visit to Egypt and a three-day state visit to Syria.

"MY UNSOLICITED ADVICE TO HIM IS TO REINVENT himself, show his independence from President Arroyo. He deserves to be seen as more than an apologist for the President." That was Michael Defensor, former member of the House of Representatives and of the Arroyo Cabinet, talking of himself and defining how he planned to rebuild his political life after gracefully conceding defeat in the 2007 senatorial elections.

Two years down the road, Defensor appears to have given up the project, realizing perhaps that reinventing himself is more difficult than reinventing the wheel. So he remains, to borrow a term from Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez, Malacañang's muchacho, ready and willing to do anything that might please his boss.

In his latest undertaking, Defensor seeks to neutralize a key witness in the scandal-ridden, $329-million national broadband network deal between the government and the Chinese firm ZTE Corp. Ms Arroyo's former chief of staff has accused Rodolfo Lozada Jr. of perjury for allegedly making contradictory statements about their meeting before the Senate and before the Court of Appeals. Lozada is the former head of a government corporation who linked First Gentleman Mike Arroyo and former Commission on Elections Chair Benjamin Abalos to massive payoffs in connection with the NBN deal. Lozada was arrested Wednesday but refused to post a P6,000 bail to signify his protest.

In his complaint, Defensor claimed that Lozada committed perjury when he gave conflicting versions of their conversation. "In the Senate, he stated that I asked him to deny that he was kidnapped," Defensor said. "In the (Court of Appeals), however, he said I asked him to deny any knowledge about the NBN-ZTE deal." These statements are "clearly contradictory and cannot be reconciled," Defensor concluded.

Whether in fact Lozada's statements are contradictory is for their lawyers to argue and for the Metropolitan Trial Court of Manila to determine. But the rest of us are free to wonder why the two statements have to be mutually exclusive. Nothing in logic (and quite possibly in law) says that Defensor could not have asked Lozada to deny both (1) that he had been kidnapped and (2) that he had any knowledge of the NBN-ZTE deal.

Defensor himself has not said which of the two "contradictory" versions of Lozada's story is the right one, but he did say his own story had been "validated" by Lozada's testimony before the Senate. But granting that all he did was to tell Lozada to deny that he had been kidnapped, wasn't he in fact telling Lozada to lie since Lozada asserts to this day that he had been taken against his will on a scary ride to Laguna before his welcoming party of policemen brought him to La Salle Green Hills? And what business did he have talking with Lozada and handing him P50,000 for "pa-meryenda"? How many others has he gifted with such a small fortune out of friendship or pity? Lozada also said Defensor mentioned something about funds money being approved by "ma'am."

Right here is sworn testimony about an attempted bribery to hide a crime (kidnapping) or two crimes (kidnapping and plunder in connection with the ZTE deal). Doesn't this constitute obstruction of justice?

This was not the first time Defensor ran interference for Malacañang in a big scandal. At one time, Defensor "rescued" a key witness who then recanted his testimony implicating the First Gentleman in a scandal involving alleged multimillion-peso secret bank accounts. Later, he produced a so-called audio expert to question the authenticity of the "Hello, Garci" tape.

The bitter irony is that Defensor has never been hailed to court for any of these attempts to thwart the administration of justice, while Lozada is in jail for telling the truth about him and his boss—or bosses. And Defensor has the effrontery to say he has taken Lozada to court to clear his name and for the sake of his children.

Maybe Defensor should just keep his children out of his fights even if he feels he needs them to win the public's sympathy. They might learn that they have a father whose loyalty to his country ends where his loyalty to the President begins.

Woods leads Mickelson by two at Quail Hollow

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA—TIGER WOODS MATCHED the course record with a 29 on the front nine which he closed with three straight birdies to finish off a 7-under 65 at the Quail Hollow Championship on Thursday.

Phil Mickelson followed in the afternoon by chipping in for eagle and making a remarkable par save from under a video board for a 5-under 67 that put him in a tie for second.

They did not play together, as was the case three weeks ago in an electric final-round pairing at the Masters. But on a warm and breezy afternoon in Carolina, it seemed as though they were never far apart.

MONTECITO Lake's shoreline, at nearly a kilometer long, is the perfect venue for tranquil walks or for families to spend their leisure afternoon picnics.

By Tessa R. Salazar

THE SOUTH IS LOOKING more like, well, anything but the south.

After Tagaytay Highlands recently revealed a Japanese-themed residential community inspired by the great Kyoto, Brittany Corp. just last weekend held an open house of a community inspired by the colonial mansions of the American South called The Mansions at Georgia Club in Sta. Rosa, Laguna.

Other high-end communities

Not to be outdone, other high-end communities are Montecito located at Ayala Land Premier's township (on Sta. Rosa-Tagaytay Road) and Eton City, a township project in Sta. Rosa, Laguna, providing not just residential enclaves but also a "championship-caliber" golf course.

Eton is also expected to build a lake village that features islands scattered across a man-made lake.

Sen. Manny Villar's high-end real estate company Brittany (a Vista Land Co.) created the Mansions at Georgia Club for the "blissful glamour of Southern charm." Located on the Sta. Rosa-Tagaytay highway, the two-story homes have ranging from 141 to 265 square meters. The development will have rows and porch es gardens, a front porch, picket fences and vibrantly colored shutters on French windows.

THE FORMER Yulo mansion is converted into Montecito's clubhouse (called Casa Tempo) for guests.

Refuge from the city

Nuvali's exclusive village Montecito is described as "a very private estate" for residents on a sprawling area with "magnificent views, rolling terrain and its own lake."

Ayala Land Premier stated that the site on which Montecito stands was originally planned by the prominent Yulo family to be...

All I needed to know about college I learned in Hollywood

By Ranier Beatrice H. Braga

COLLEGE IS A RITE OF passage for most of us who were lucky enough to survive the shark-infested pool that we called high school. After graduation, we move on to a bigger world, one full of unexpected surprises, new opportunities, and unique experiences. So, to help you adjust into this wonderful new stage, we decided to create a little guide for you. Mixing Hollywood magic with actual experience, we bring you the eight things you need to know before you make that first Chuck Taylor-covered step to higher learning.

Disclaimer: This guide contains spoilers for movies and a certain TV show.

The Lesson: Dress for success.
The Professors: Miranda Priestly and Andy Sachs (The Devil Wears Prada)

There are people who will judge you based on how you look. This isn't to say that you should become obsessed with improving only your appearance, but looking acceptable is at least the minimum. By acceptable, we mean that you should know that Havaianas and short-shorts are for the beach and shoes and closets are for the classroom.

Mean Girls' Cady Heron will teach you about social homework.

IN MY SENIOR YEAR IN HIGH school, I went to our annual dance with a date. Being an absolute geek, it was quite an accomplishment; my date was pretty hot (yes, she was pretty AND hot). In reality, I asked my sister to ask our neighbor in Alabang to go with me.

The night started with the customary pre-dance semi-formal dinner (we had it in Greenhills and was very memorable, but that's another story) and ended with the post dance hashup. The dance itself was a blur and quite forgettable. What stood out was our trip to Makati after the dance.

We went to three locations: Stony's, Euphoria, and Kublai's Rock—all closed and forgotten now. Or so I thought.

Twenty years later, I got an invitation to attend a birthday party in this venue called Kublai's Rock. I couldn't believe my eyes. THE Kublai's Rock? Memories of getting sloshed on beer and gin to rock music came flooding back, and I half-smiled, half-grimaced.

On the night of the party I almost drove to Jupiter Street in Makati (where it used to be) until I reread the invitation, which said Magallanes. On my way there, I started doubting whether this place was going to be fun. I mean, Magallanes is not exactly the most rockin' of places (no offense meant).

However, as soon as I entered the doors bearing the giant K and R, all doubts disappeared. The place was dark, though smaller than the old place. But it felt like the old place, couples huddled in dark corners, people dancing to the music (that Friday night it was 80's music: Rock, Pop and New Wave), rowdy smokers outside.

Not surprisingly, I saw a couple of familiar faces who used to frequent the original Kublai's. I also tried the food. Back in school, I couldn't afford much beyond the beer and never ordered anything from the menu. The food is actually quite good and, according to Fred, the owner, a good part of their business comes from the lunch and dinner crowd (well, this is Magallanes, after all).

I've gone back a couple of times since my first "re-visit," and I sometimes half-expect my high school dance date to pop through the doors in her black mini-dress. Hey, it can happen. I mean, if Kublai's Rock can resurrect itself after being quiet for 20 years, anything's possible.

24/7 SUPER RADAR

by Janine Cuenca-Zhain and Alexandra Espinosa

CONTRARY TO POPULAR belief, figuring out what women want is actually fairly simple. Recognize their talents, put on some smooth sounds, and throw in accessories into the mix and you're sure they will be pleased. This week, cross over to the feminine side by checking out the following events:

SONGS and shoes

Shoes

Discover something that women have known all along: shoes are works of art. See "Portraits of Shoes, Stories of Feet," an exhibit of 18th to 21st century shoes by French curator Yves Sabourin at the Exchange Mezzanine, HSBC Plaza, Ayala Ave. cor. Sen. Gil Puyat Ave. Makati until June 20. To highlight the interplay of cultures, this exhibit will be alongside shoes from the Marikina Shoe Museum collection and exciting designs from top Filipino shoe designers. For more information, call 889-2224.

Girl power

Friday, May 8, is your last chance to check out Girl, a solo exhibit of mixed media paintings by contemporary visual artist Lee Lisa at the Alliance Française de Manille, 209 Nicanor Garcia Street, Bel-Air 2, Makati City. Call 895-7585 or 895-7441 for more details.

Lady sings

One of music's legendary icons from the 1950s, and one of the best-selling female artists in traditional pop music with over 100 million records sold, Patti Page, comes to the Philippines on Friday, May 8, for a concert entitled Patti Page Greatest Hits. Hear "Tennessee Waltz," "Mockin' Bird Hill," and "Allegheny Moon" at the Araneta Coliseum, Cubao, Quezon City. Show starts at 8:00 p.m. For tickets, call 911-5555.

Windy city specials

On Friday, May 8, grab the chance to see some of the best comedians from Chicago perform at the Aliw Theater. Scheduled to appear are Chris Pineda, Monty Gerlith, Kenny Cousin, Tim Stott, Aaron Cudd, and La Coca in an event dubbed Chicago Comedy—Philippine Tour. Aliw Theater is located at Star City, CCP Complex, Roxas Boulevard, Pasay City. For more information, call 911-3333.

Quizzes and 5 favorite things and other rants about "25 Randumb things"

By Wangyo Gallego

IT BEGAN WITH THE constant changing of the lay-out. Facebook users from all over the world were complaining in their status updates that they couldn't navigate properly through their favorite social networking site. The updates were endless and becoming quite annoying at some point. But it didn't stop there.

Someone had the bright idea of lifting off from a blog site something called "25 Random Things" and put it to their notes. And then, they tagged people to do the same. Of course, when I was first tagged back in December last year, it was still 16. And because it was my sister and my brother who filled out the form and asked me to participate, I did. But I stated in my own note that I had a blog of my own and it was quite redundant. You want 16 random things about me, just check my blog. It has been running for the past five years or more. You'll get more than 16 jumping through the archive.

Then sometime around January, the number was raised to 25 and there was a "25 random things" revolution all over Facebook. Most people probably have at least 20% of their contacts list that they don't really want to be there, people they don't really know or care about, and usually, it's them who put it up and it's their status update that appears on the Facebook homepage. Surprisingly enough, you get tagged by people from high school or college who you don't really want to hear from again and you are invited to view their "25 random things."

Quiz

Thankfully, it's over. But then, it wasn't long before we were inundated by quizzes: Which Marvel character are you? Which Greek God are you? They had a quiz for every thing: What's your superpower? They might as well have a quiz for what disease will you die from.

ABOUT FACE E4

What's wrong with answering those quizzes?

By Francisco Sta. Maria

WHEN MY FRIEND told me about a new networking site, I really didn't care because I already had Friendster and Multiply accounts and I didn't even take those seriously—I just had them because everyone I knew had them too.

Several e-mails alerted me that some of my friends were inviting me to be their contact in Facebook but I ignored them. The e-mail alerts kept coming so I said, what the heck, if you can't beat them, join them, right?

Different

I soon realized that Facebook was different. Not only can you post blogs, upload photos and videos, you can also do interactive stuff with your contacts and even chat with friends online. Everything you do and post can be seen by your contacts; people can actually react to whatever you put in your account, which made it even more awesome. I think what made Facebook sensational is the fact that it's both very public and very personal. Don't get me wrong; it's not all that public because there are also settings you can use if you want to be private.

The quizzes

Then, the Facebook quizzes came and changed everything. People actually go out of their way just to answer the quizzes, even at work. I confess I'm one of them.

I asked my friends why they think people are so hooked on answering quizzes. One of them said, "People usually love to answer quizzes. First you have to think hard for the right answer; second it's time consuming and entertaining; third we somehow find the results. Quizzes are normally

WHAT'S WRONG E4

My top 5 favorite facebook quizzes

By Paco Sta. Maria

Which side of your brain is dominant?

I like the fact that the quiz shows that I use both sides of my brain.

What song of the Jonas Brothers are you?

I'm a big fan of the Jonas Brothers, and I want to know if there is somehow a connection between us, even in just a silly quiz.

What kind of brain do you have?

I like it because the quiz showed I'm smart.

How delicious are you (if I was some kind of food)?

I like food, and it's funny how they describe a person's character with the kind of food that matches them.

Which of your chakras is most open?

I'm interested in Numerology and it's related teachings.

Five games that will make you want a PSP

Ridiculously fun, addictive, disarmingly cute—and that's just one game

By Joel-Angelo Q. Sagario

I CONSIDERED getting an iPod last Christmas. When I asked my cousin which model I should get, he said me to get any.

Instead, he suggested I buy a PSP, which he argued could not only carry games but also video files, music, and other digital goodies. He basically hyped it as a one-stop magic box of entertainment.

"Besides," he rolled his eyes, "You'll have a lot more fun with it when you're bored."

"Here," he said, "I'll lend you my PSP. Try it out and see for yourself."

Here is a shortlist of games that have made me into a potential PSP owner.

Charice draws musical 'Inspiration' from her mother

By [illegible]

THERE'S MORE RE-straint and a lot of heart in "My Inspiration," Charice's latest album for Star Records that pays musical tribute to the 16-going-on-17-year-old performer's relationship with her mother.

Many local singers spice up their pop-flavored releases with a smattering of oft-recorded revivals that don't share a common theme, but nevertheless draw instant recall from music buffs for their familiar melodies. Charice's 12-track collection enjoys an advantage over other Pinoy-produced recordings in this regard. Her album achieves a sleek and unified sound by following a central motif, and features an age-appropriate lineup of inspired covers and one radio-friendly OPM tune.

Jonathan Manalo's "Always You" recalls the catchy melodic patterns and tricky vocal dynamics of Whitney Houston's crowd-pleasing [illegible] power ballads. Fortunately, arranger Arnold Buena knows exactly how to take full advantage of Charice's performing bravado to boost the [illegible] singer's hit-making potential.

Singing with conviction ("Wind Beneath My Wings") has never been a weak point for Charice. In the new album, however, she adds a welcome dimension to her crowd-pleasing rendition by practicing restraint where it's needed. In her version of Josh Groban's "You Raise Me Up," her voice soothes like a [illegible] devoid of the original song's tendency toward [illegible] sentimentality, with a lot of help from arranger Homer Flores.

She also holds back on the [illegible] in her remake of the Spice Girls' "Mama." In "You And Me Against the World," she deftly provides the backup and [illegible] chorus to complement her mother Raquel's [illegible] pipes.

As the track listing suggests, Charice is partial to Houston and Mariah Carey's syrupy songs and soul-tinged singing skills. In fact, one of the album's best tracks is her cover of Carey's 1992 collaboration with Trey Lorenz, "I'll Be There," which showcases Manalo's tricky but brilliantly engineered vocal arrangement of the Michael Jackson original. She manages to deliver a rousing, [illegible] interpretation that doesn't sound self-indulgent.

Vocal affectations

In contrast, the young singer also emulates Houston's often show-stopping ballad, "You'll Never Stand Alone"—but, the result is less than flattering, because she opts to mimic the [illegible] diva's [illegible] "oh, yes, I do" ad libs and general vocal affectations. At this point in her Oprah-fueled, globe-trotting career, being relegated to an impersonator isn't something that would help boost her musical stock. Otherwise, it doesn't help that some narrow-minded sectors of her growing fan base see more similarities than Charice herself, and do more harm than good for their idol. Sometimes, a well-meaning critique would send them off the wall like predatory vultures claiming for blood.)

Few and far between

This time around, the distinct slippage ("For Mama," "Wind Beneath My Wings" and, most glaringly, in "You And Me Against The World") are few and far between, and are no longer as jarring as those in previous recordings. We feel strongly about this because the technical vehicle isn't something a studio can't fix, unless Charice and the producers don't mind getting those errors [illegible] in her recordings.

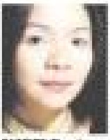

We look forward to seeing what Charice's US handlers have in store for her. Of course, she can continue singing standards and power ballads to make hay with the current interest on her steely vocal prowess, but she'll have a hard time extending her musical shelf-life and carving an indelible and sustainable niche if she continues to rely solely on revivals to drive her repertoire.
